The Occupation Of Adana In The National Struggle and Order Problem

World War I, which lasted four years, ended when Armistice of Moudros was signed on 30 October, 1918. Hence, the period of Armistice started for the Ottoman Empire and Turkish Nation. In this period, the native country and sovereignty of the Turkish Nation has been started to get from the people. On December 21, 1918, with the French occupation of Adana, clashes gained momentum for the National Struggle in Adana.

Through the occupations and banditry life, property, and honour security disappeared and this situation has been stated with the concept of "order".

Determinations of social mobility in Adana and its phases until the liberation, the activities of the Gendarmerie, the actions of the French and the Armenians during the occupation, and the actions to be taken in order to ensure the order and order will be discussed in the proceedings in this session.

Key Words : Adana, Çukurova, Public Security, National Struggle, Occupation, Armenians
